Protect Essential Public Safety Services

Top Community Priorities:

- Maintain 911 Emergency Response Times
- Provide Services for the Victims of Child Abuse
- Maintain/Prevent Cuts to Rural Ambulance Services
- Provide Mental Health Services for Children
- Ensure there are Sheriff's Deputies On-Duty 24 Hours a Day

Did you know? With limited funding, volunteer fire departments/ firefighters play critical roles in protecting life and property in Humboldt County. Renewing Yes on O will continue to support these volunteers and maintain resources/training that better and more safely protect County residents.

Yes on O restores protective and counselling services for victims/witnesses of child abuse – funds that have been severely reduced in recent years. Measure O will help protect children that have been victims of horrible crimes.

Yes on O fights drugs/narcotics, like meth in our County, which continues to be a problem. Measure O helps fight drug-related crimes, eliminate meth labs and provides drug prevention/rehabilitation services.

Yes on O is fiscally accountable. Measure O continues to require Independent Citizen Oversight and financial audits to ensure funding is spent efficiently and as promised to voters.

Measure O simply renews existing voter-approved local funding for sheriff's patrols, rural ambulance, fire protection, crime/drug prevention, road maintenance, service for abused children, and mental health services – without raising taxes.

Losing Brandon

Editor:

As I write this I am alternating between rage and despair ("Teen Stabbing Suspect to Be Tried as Juvenile Under Bill Signed by Brown," posted online Oct. 14). Brandon Brocius had two sets of parents and he loved all his family dearly. His parents did a very good job of guiding him as he grew. Respect, boundaries and a very loving heart. He was a boy who anyone could simply choose to love. Our family was adopted by him a long time ago.

In the mix of all the boys that lived here there was a little girl. She is now 12 and I am very worried about her. Brandon was another big brother to her and his death has shaken the world as she knew it. When I told her what happened to Brandon, she began shaking and her eyes

Rebuilding the Temple

We are always in a state of rebuilding the temple.
Brick by brick
We mortar our proverbs,
Our collective wisdom over centuries
Of migration and struggle,
Through laughter and tears,
We remember our losses, and look to the children for hope, that life goes on Through turmoil and digging through the rubble
We want to be one of the helpers
The ones who feed and shelter
The ones who show up to dissent
May we always be on the side of the angels.
Forces of greed and hate will do their dance
But as long as there are heroes
In the subways, In the woods, in the clinics, in the schools, always rebuilding
Through our grief
We extend our hand

were streaming with tears. When she could talk, she kind of yelled, "How could God let those horrible people be here on Earth? Why would God let them hurt Brandon when he is so sweet and good?" Later she said, "I can't even go to his funeral because I can't think about crying." I said, "That's OK. He would understand."

Later she said she couldn't go to school because she was just too ill and called me to come over. Seeing her only broke my heart more. On the wall above her bed, she has a picture of her brother Marcus who was in the wind two years ago at age 18. Then she has her grandmother who she lost six months after Marcus. It hurts so much because she has Brandon's picture so that she can turn and see him before she goes to sleep. I said, 'Oh, baby. You need to put that picture away until you feel better. He is gone now.' She reached and touched her little heart and said, 'He is right here with me.'

Safe, Not Safe

Editor:

Michael Mathe (Mailbox, Oct. 18) should not worry too much about sending his son to Humboldt State University because, by and large, the campus is reasonably safe. There is however, no logical reason that administrators at Humboldt State University and radio station KHSU have determined that suddenly, after decades of broadcasting all night long with live people at the station, it is now not safe to broadcast live after 10 p.m. That is, unless a staff person is present. This move is simply a further attempt to ruin KHSU by a thousand cuts.

Until Vice President of Advancement Craig Wruck and KHSU Manager Peter Fretwell are gone, then I agree that the campus is not safe. Mr. Fretwell was not properly or fully vetted for the job and continues to operate and enforce a hostile work environment. I urge all to pay close attention to what is happening and to withhold their financial support.

Sharon Fennell, Manila

A bar row stabbing highlights Arcata's spiking violent crime rate

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Initial reports are that the altercation that ultimately left a 26-year-old Eureka man bleeding to death on an Arcata sidewalk began over a hat, or some other piece of clothing, according to interim Arcata Police Chief Richard Ehle.

"What it was probably about is too much testosterone and too much drinking," Ehle said, adding that both Peter Samuel Triantos and the man who allegedly stabbed him, 27-year-old Brandon Matthew Watson, were both heavily inebriated at the time of the altercation, which occurred about 1:40 a.m. on Oct. 25.

Triantos' death is the latest in what's now a six-year spike in homicides and violent crime in Arcata that's unmatched going back more than three decades. Consider this: Arcata has now recorded eight homicides since the beginning of 2013, after seeing just five in the 22-year period from 1991 through 2012. (It's worth noting that three of those recent eight killings occurred on or near bar row, with highly intoxicated victims and/or assailants who had been drinking in the bars prior.) But it's not just homicides. According to Department of Justice data, aggravated assault and violent crime rates are also up substantially.

Ehle, a more than 45-year veteran in law enforcement who came to the city about five months ago to fill in for former Chief Tom Chapman until the city taps a permanent replacement, said the rate of violence in the college town is surprising.

"The level of lawlessness and assaultive behavior is pretty bad, and I did 25 years in Oakland so I'm not immune to having seen an awful lot of violence over the years," Ehle said. "We've really got to look at the level of dysfunction, the drug use and the drinking."

Details are still sparse as to what exactly happened between Triantos and Watson, but Ehle said they knew one another. Though the two were not friends, Ehle said they were familiar from frequenting the plaza bar scene and overlapping social circles. Ehle said indications are both men were drunk when something — possibly the dispute over a hat or other piece of clothing — sparked a verbal altercation while they were inside a plaza establishment. This led to a physical fight outside that was broken up by bouncers. Then, Ehle said, the pair apparently moved down the block and around a corner, where Watson allegedly stabbed Triantos, who stumbled about a block before collapsing near the intersection of H and Ninth streets.

News

When paramedics arrived on scene, Ehle said Triantos was still conscious but died after being taken to Mad River Community Hospital.

Through witness statements and what he described as “definitive” surveillance footage, Ehle said officers were able to identify Watson as the suspect and arrested him Oct. 27. He’s being held on $1 million bail.

Triantos’ killing — which Ehle described as “tragic” — puts the Arcata Plaza and the city’s recent spike in violence back in the spotlight.

“This was just ridiculous, quite frankly, but these things start and then they just get carried away,” he said.

Mayor Sofia Pereira said she’s increasingly heard violent crime brought up as a point of concern for residents. This, she said, represents a shift for the city, which has been “really fortunate” to have gone years-long stretches without a homicide and with relatively low rates of violence. But the sense is things are changing.

“I think we are seeing some things happen with our night-life in our community and we need to find a way to address that that makes sense,” Pereira said, adding that she feels the city has made some headway changing the culture around the Arcata Plaza during daytime hours with increased police patrols and other measures, but that it needs to find similarly effective solutions for the party culture that takes hold after hours.

It’s worth noting that the recent uptick in violence isn’t unique to Arcata. For 30 years, Humboldt County had recorded an average of about nine homicides a year until 2013. In the five-year period from 2013 through 2017, the county has averaged 16.4, including a record 23 in 2016. So far this year, the county has recorded 11 homicides, putting it on pace to log more than 13 in 2018.

But what seems to set Arcata apart is how quickly its violent crime numbers have spiked and how starkly they contrast with its reputation as a peace-loving college town. In the 28-year period from 1985 through 2012, the city averaged 31 aggravated assaults, 47 violent crimes and 0.46 homicides a year. From 2013 through 2017, the last year for which full statistics are available from the Department of Justice, the city saw an average of 42 aggravated assaults (a more than 25 percent increase), 69 violent crimes (a more than 31 percent spike) and 1.4 homicides (a 66 percent jump).

Speaking to the Journal a few years ago, then Police Chief Tom Chapman said he'd like to call the spike in violent crime an anomaly but couldn't ignore what he was seeing: more weapons, more mental illness and more drug and alcohol abuse.

"It's frustrating," he said at the time. "There seems to be this devaluation of human life."

That's a sentiment that has been since echoed by county officials, including District Attorney Maggie Fleming, who said it appears people are seemingly more willing to turn to acts of violence then they used to be.

So what does a police department do to combat this? What is APD doing to keep the city and the plaza safe?

Ehle said his department has some plans. First and foremost, he said most of APD's calls for service originate from the plaza, most of them coming late at night or early in the morning, Thursday through Sunday.

"We need to bolster our presence there and keep a higher profile," he said, adding that just having multiple officers on scene when the five bars on or around the plaza close down can help deter fights and rowdy behavior.

But Ehle said that will only go so far and the department will have to work with the bars, as well.

Ehle said he plans to work with the state Bureau of Alcohol Beverage Control to offer trainings to local bar owners and their bartenders, counseling about the signs of inebriation and the risks of over serving.

"I'm afraid there's a lot of over serving," Ehle said, adding that if you go down to the plaza as the bars empty out Thursday, Friday or Saturday nights, you're going to see a lot of "very, very intoxicated" people. "At some point, you have to cut them off."

Ehle also expressed some hope that relief is coming to APD in the form of a pending ABC decision. After a four-day hearing, an administrative court judge is currently weighing whether to recommend that the bureau revoke the liquor licenses currently held for two plaza bars, Sidelines and Toby and Jack's, in the face of allegations that both establishments allowed widespread narcotic sales to take place on the premises. During the hearing, Arcata City Manager Karen Diemer testified that 40 percent of Arcata's police service calls come from the plaza, with about half of them drug and alcohol related. Over the last four years, the two bars ranked as the most frequent locations to which police were called, save for one year when Toby and Jack's ranked third.

The interim chief said bluntly that closing the two bars would make Arcata a safer place, though there's currently no indication either Watson or Triantos set foot in either establishment the night of Triantos' death.

"It would have a profound impact," Ehle said. "It can be huge. One, it sets the tone for other establishments. Two, it eliminates two problematic locations where there have been rather flagrant narcotics sales and other violations."

Pereira was more diplomatic, saying time will tell what comes of the ABC case. But she did say she sees a structural problem on the plaza.

"I think there was a point in time where in Arcata it made sense to centralize bars and I don't think it makes sense anymore for our community," she said. "I think we have seen over time, and especially in recent years, that it creates issues to have that high level of concentration of people, especially at closing time. ... This is a priority. We want people to feel safe, no matter where they are or what time of day it is."

Blood Suckers

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

What happens when you mix the Mall of America with a laser light show and get the whole thing high AF? Las Vegas is about to find out.

On Nov. 1, the city is poised to welcome what's reported to be the world's largest cannabis dispensary to its garish ranks. Planet 13, the 40,000-foot monstrosity — for the record, that's roughly twice the size of Eureka Natural Foods — is opening just off the Las Vegas Strip and is described by Esquire magazine as an "amusement-park-meets-Apple-store-meets-night-club of cannabis." The building's exterior will feature large LED lotus flowers inspired by Burning Man that will move to the beat of pulsing music and a fog-laden, lighted water fountain. Inside, shoppers will find six glowing orbs dancing through the air above a motion-sensing LED walkway and projectors displaying "three-dimensional visuals." There's also a virtual graffiti wall, where people can use lasers to draw and tag to their heart's content before the wall is wiped clean for the next customer. In total, Planet 13 is said to have spent more than $1 million on special effects designed to leave customers "overwhelmed by the aesthetics."

As far as products, Planet 13 will offer two lines — one medical, one recreational — entirely sourced from its own cultivation facility, an indoor operation that spans 15,000 square feet and produces more than 2,100 pounds of cannabis per year.

Elsewhere, in another sign that cannabis culture is quickly going off the rails, rapper 2 Chainz — you know, the guy who hosts the television show Most Expensivest and launched his own line of marijuana themed ugly Christmas sweaters — has launched his own cannabis brand.

The Gas Cannabis Co., created in partnership with Green Street Agency, has begun offering three varieties of bud in select cannabis dispensaries and pulls its name from a 2 Chainz lyric in which he compares a drug house to a gas station. The flowers will be called Octane 93, Octane 89 and Octane 87 and the website offers a brief description of each complete with a 2 Chainz endorsement. For example: "Ninety-three octane got me gassed up." Sad news, though, Humboldt: The "where to fuel up" link on the website informs us that the nearest "gas station" is in San Francisco.

Possibly intimidated by the prospect of competing with Mr. Chainz's dabbing Santa sweater, the upscale marijuana retailer MedMen has filed an application with the federal government seeking to trademark the term "cannabis" for use on T-shirts. The application, filed last month with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, follows the company's successful effort to trademark a geometric pot leaf pattern design for shirts last year. But experts seem skeptical the government would approve the broad trademark without any stylized logos, designs or other terms.

If at this point in the column you find yourself thinking that soulless capitalists sucking the blood out of what was once counterculture is the scariest thing going on in cannabis right now, get a load of this: Scientists have discovered that blood-sucking sand flies are literally coming for your cannabis plants.

The flies, which suck human blood and transmit a variety of infections, including the ulcer-causing leishmaniasis, need to drink sugary sap in order to survive and a group of scientists that analyzed sites from Brazil to the Middle East found their favorite treat to be cannabis plants.

"We conclude that cannabis comprised but a small fraction of the available sugar sources in any particular habitat and that its ample representation among sand fly plant meals signifies bona fide attraction," the researchers wrote in an article for this month's Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

This begs the question: Do they have sand flies in Las Vegas? Because that would suck for Planet 13.

Election Homework

Unless you've been living under a rock for months, you're probably aware that Election Day is less than two weeks away. And if you're freaking out because you've been entirely consumed by watching national pundits froth at the mouth over faraway congressional races and don't know where you stand on local candidates and measures, take heart: The good folks at Access Humboldt have you covered.

They have taken the time and effort to compile all the videos they could track down of local candidate forums, election coverage done by KEET PBS North Coast and packaged it with Access Humboldt's own election offerings on a single web page, giving you a kind of one-stop shop for local election video content (www.accesshumboldt.net/site/humboldt-county-2018-election-coverage).

Now a couple of disclaimers to keep in mind while taking all this in. First and foremost, Access Humboldt has offered to make its community channels available to political candidates, campaigns and advocates for ballot measures, but not all opted to take part, so its offerings are not necessarily comprehensive. For example, the Scott Malcolm's Straight Talk in Humboldt series has interviewed some Eureka candidates but not all. Second, because Access Humboldt has made its services available to advocates, some of the linked programming is decidedly created through that lens. For example, the Accountability TV piece on Measure K — the sanctuary county ordinance — is created by the North Coast People's Alliance, which has publicly endorsed the measure. (The entire Accountability TV series is designed to showcase candidates and measures endorsed by the North Coast People's Alliance.)

So voters should make sure to pay attention to who's producing the content and who's asking the questions so they can judge what they're seeing in its full context. (The Journal will insert a plug here urging more local organizations to get involved with creating Access Humboldt election content, as voters would benefit from seeing elections issues explored through a wide variety of lenses.)

Finally, if you're reading this and your heart is sinking because you are realizing that California's voter registration deadline came and went Oct. 22 and you're still unregistered or registered at an old address, don't panic! You have recourse.

The Humboldt County Elections Office sent out a press release yesterday reminding that California now offers conditional voter registration and provision voting for those who didn't get registered before the deadline. Beginning yesterday and continuing through Election Day, voters can venture on over to the Humboldt County

Crimes from the Past

Historical society gives new life to forgotten jail ledgers

By Kimberly Wear
kim@northcoastjournal.com

Recorded in the eloquent hand-written script of a bygone era, a set of recently rediscovered ledgers contains more than just a list of the individuals who were led through the doors of the Humboldt County jail starting back in the 1880s.

The seven logs, along with an equal set of mug shot books, also offer a glimpse into an often unseen side of the region's past. Now the Humboldt County Historical Society is ensuring those volumes — covering varying periods from 1888 to 1952 — take on new meaning in the Information Age.

So far, research assistant and project director Morgan Harvey has spent 400 hours transcribing the first three ledgers in the collection — covering 1888 through 1913 — by painstakingly digitalizing the entries into a searchable index that can be utilized for generations to come.

Each line in the large tomes — worn with use and age but in remarkably good condition despite being stashed away and all but forgotten for decades — catalogued the gender, race (sometimes listed as native country), occupation, place of residence, crime and sentence of each individual who landed in law enforcement's grasp.

But those seemingly simple denotations provide a wealth of previously untapped data about who was arrested and why during a more than 50-year span, including a time when thousands of immigrants from all over the world were flocking to this last outpost of the West.

"Every line in the ledgers is a story," Harvey says. "Every line is someone's life."

Those unique narratives were almost lost, however, had it not been for a series of fortuitous events that placed the ledgers in the hands of Lt. Dean Flint of the Humboldt County Sheriff's Office.

After receiving a call last year from a deputy coroner who was unsure of just what to do with the bound volumes he found sequestered away in a storage area, Flint had them brought over to his office.

What he hadn't expected was how far back the books reached.

Realizing their historic value, the lieutenant did what any seasoned law enforcement officer would do: He sought out expert advice. In this case, Flint reached out to his mother-in-law, who just happens to be a genealogy buff.

"The penmanship was absolutely gorgeous," Flint says. "Nothing was scratched out or whited out or had a line drawn through it. Every F or T or R was identical ... the penmanship was so beautiful and we don't have that anymore. I just thought the books themselves were really beautiful, like a piece of art."

After sending some photos to his mother-in-law, she emailed back a link to the historical society, telling Flint to give them a call, saying she was sure local historians would be interested. She was right.

"It just landed in my lap and I can't take A graph depicting booking charges found in historic jail ledgers dating from 1888-1913 shows changes in local criminal justice over a 25-year span (above). The recently rediscovered volumes now being digitalized by the Humboldt County Historical Society can be cross referenced in some cases, as seen below, with a set of mug shot books. credit for doing the right thing, it was my mother-in-law," Flint says, adding that he's pretty sure she'll be headed over to the historical society to get a first-hand look at the ledgers the next time she's in town. "I knew something needed to be done, I just didn't know what."

When historical society archivist James Garrison came to take a look, Flint says you could "see him just light up" and the two spent a few hours going through volumes, finding hidden gems like listings for Prohibition-era crimes such as having a "blind pig" — basically a hidden bar most likely containing a couple of bottles and some glasses.

With the historical society connection made and Sheriff William Honsal on board, the 14 volumes were soon stacked into a hand dolly to begin the short journey over to the historical society's 1902 Colonial Revival-style headquarters on Eighth Street, joining an already extensive collection that is accessible to the public.

Then the work began.

Harvey applied for and received a grant from the Tracy Memorial Trust, a fund of the Humboldt Area Foundation, to set about making the collection into a user-friendly, navigable resource for researchers and members of the public alike.

"I think that our history should be accessible," she says, adding that receiving the grant has been "energizing" for the organization, opening up a new way of thinking about opportunities for forging deeper connections between the community and the society's extensive collection, noting those resources "aren't doing anyone any good if they just live in an archive."

"There are so many questions that can be asked and answered with this data," Harvey says.

Many of the ledgers also correspond to the books of mug shots that contain front and side views of arrestees who have booking numbers pinned to their chests that can be crossmatched across the volumes and to court dockets that contain the transcripts of local trials, which the historical society already had on hand.

The early photographs, which begin around 1926, are “candid moments in someone’s life” that likely hadn’t been expected — taken at a time when most pictures were posed affairs at picnics and social gatherings or portraits of those wealthy enough to afford the luxury, Harvey says.

In a recent presentation, Harvey gave several examples of how the material can be transformed from banal jail intake information into a larger interpretation of societal norms at the time, including social justice and women’s rights, as well as a resource for genealogy research.

Among the historical avenues Harvey was able to traverse with the records was a look at the 171 individuals processed for “alleged insanity” between 1888 to 1913, a charge that became less common after the turn of the 20th century, she notes.

Looking at the sentencing notes, Harvey found those who were deemed insane were sent to the Napa Asylum, which included women who supposedly suffered from the female-specific ailment “hystero-eroto mania” or hysteria.

Hysteria and “unknown” were the two main reasons listed for the women confined between July of 1896 and June of 1897 at the asylum, where they were expected to turn out items like aprons and sheets for patient beds during their stay, according to hospital records Harvey tracked down.

One of the anomalies that Harvey found in the processing records for these women was that the person who brought them to the jail was left conspicuously blank in the logs, unlike other listings, but they were likely brought in by a husband or father. The women also don’t appear to have been taken before a judge for due process.

They were simply sent away “for who knows how long,” Harvey says.

While no records on specific patients were available, Harvey was able to track one of those women, Clara, through the historical society’s collection of mortuary records, which shows she died at the institution of dysentery — an infection spread by contaminated food or drink — in 1893.

She notes that these are the types of

doors into the past that these ledgers can open, with “so many applications” possible and “so many stories to be told.”

“So much of the historical information we have is about wealthy property-owning men and those aren’t the only people who lived here,” Harvey says.

And unlike the typical routes for genealogy research tools — like a line in an obituary or a denotation in a baptismal record — these books “just have more color.”

At the end of the day, these jail logs and mug shots are another way to “connect history to the community,” Harvey says, adding that the historical society is grateful to the sheriff’s office for the donation and to HAF for providing the funding to transform the information into a useable format.

“Anyone who looks at these books can see they are beautiful and unique,” Harvey says. “We are lucky that they didn’t get thrown away.” ●

Boat to table

Long have we enjoyed the hefty sandwiches and stacked, house-ground burgers at Arcata Pizza and Deli. They're almost enough to hinder exploring the rest of the chalkboard menu. And, OK, maybe rolling in late at night, a little worse for wear, you weren't in the mood to experiment with the seafood.

Let your gaze drop to the "Hook & Line" board with the big fish on top. The owners of APD are also the captains of a pair of fishing boats, the Scrimshaw and the Markit 8, the fruits of which arrive weekly on the board and in fried fillets via little red, paper-lined baskets from the kitchen.

The local lingcod fish and chips ($16) came courtesy of the Scrimshaw this week. The delicately panko-crusting fillets break open to steamy, tender, white fish that is lovely with just a squeeze of lemon or one of the two accompanying sauces: a sweet, tangy citrus aioli or a traditional tartar sauce. U.K. natives will sigh over the lack of batter and wedge-cut potatoes, but given our refusal to follow your spelling conventions, isn't this rather a small thing? Let yourself enjoy a haystack of skinny fries that are as close as you can get to fast food (in the best way) without that one friend making you watch a documentary on factory farming again. Trust us, this is better.

If you still have room in your boat, the clam chowder ($3.80 cup, $7 bowl) will make you forget about the goopy business you can stand a spoon in. Instead, it's none too salty and full of skin-on potatoes and decidedly un-canny clams with a little white wine whisked into the cream.

Saturday special

While you are poking around the Lao Oriental Market (2908 E St., Eureka) on a Saturday, rooting through boxes of bitter melon and eggplants both long and golf ball sized, it's easy to overlook the unmarked stack of a couple dozen paper-wrapped bánh mì sandwiches ($5.99). Easy and tragic.

Let's appreciate for a moment the Vietnamese creation — called khao chĩ in Laos — that looks France in the eye and asks, Frère, do you even sandwich? The flavors of fragrant cilantro and the spicy, tart, sweet pickled radish and carrot against the mix of savory meat, eggs, tofu or fish are unmatched. Its variations are many, even reaching into the realm of dessert.

Those found at the little Henderson Center shop, brought up from the Bay Area on most Saturdays (and Saturdays only), are the version we see perhaps most often in the U.S., with a schmear of pepper-corn-spiked pâté, layers of pale Vietnamese pork sausage, ham and head cheese, along with cilantro, sliced fresh jalapeños and a smattering of pickled daikon radish and carrot. The baguette is a little more delicate than the usual around here, flaking off as you unwrap your slightly dented prize. Don't dwell on the superficial imperfections. Focus on the riot of tastes, the vegetable crunch and the perfect balance of something that's come so far to meet you.

Cookies from the burrito place

Amigas Burritos has long had a loyal following, one that's hanging in with the change of ownership since Jorge Bravo, who worked there some 12 years, bought it two years ago. Regulars come for the burritos but we're here for dessert. The saucer-sized cookies in plastic wrap by the register are unremarkable looking but they're grandma-level stuff.

These are the kinds of homemade goodies you used to have to mow somebody's lawn for. The thick, palm-sized brownie's flaky top is dotted with chocolate chips and wonderfully fudgy and moist, right to the crusty corners ($1.35). There's also a two-hander of a peanut butter-chocolate chip cookie with chopped peanuts that bends and breaks in that gentle way only fresh cookies do ($1.25). The oatmeal, cranberry and white chocolate cookie is a soft, lumpy fall treat alternative for those who are pumpkin spiced out ($1.25).

If you're lucky, the mini cheesecakes Bravo whips up won't be sold out ($2.50). More airy mousse than dense cheesecake, the lightly tangy fluff topped with berries comes in a cup of crumbly graham cracker crust that honestly could fall apart from a harsh word. But it's a simple, sweet surprise at the burrito shop. ●

Ripcord

David Lindsay-Abaire's Ripcord, the current production at Redwood Curtain, reunites three local favorites, director Cassandra Hesseltine and lead players Peggy Metzger and Susan Abbey, who teamed up for Lindsay-Abaire's excellent Good People at Redwood Curtain earlier this year. It's a dream team that's clearly at home with the touching and humorous perspective on life that is a signature of Lindsay-Abaire's work.

Abby (Metzger) is someone we all know and try hard to love. She's a professional grump who dedicates her life to pushing people away when all they want to do is be friends. What she's really doing is protecting herself against ever being hurt the way she was in the past. Marilyn (Abbey) is Abby's polar opposite — always chirpy and cheerful, full of life and with the potential to be as irritating as all get-out. Fate — always ready with a potentially untenable situation — has Marilyn assigned to be Abby's new roommate at the Bristol Place Senior Living Center in suburban New Jersey, the latest in a long line of roomies that Abby's managed to dispatch over the previous four years.

In an attempt to beat Abby at her own game, Marilyn stages a contest of wills. If Abby can make Marilyn lose her temper, she'll move out. But if Marilyn can scare Abby, she gets to stay and claim the bed by the window. Thus begins the great challenge, starting with a visit to a haunted house where long-suffering Bristol Place orderly and part-time actor Scotty (David Hamilton) is performing. Then the dirty tricks really begin as the women research each other's lives and weaponize each other's families. Marilyn's daughter Colleen (Natasha White), son Lewis (Jeremy Webb) and son-in law Derek (Gary Bowman) become willing participants in the game.

As the stakes get ever higher, the women are forced to confront their own weaknesses and fears — the deep secrets they've been hiding under their outward personas — including Abby's long-lost son Benjamin (Webb, again). But, like the characters in Good People, these two eventually learn that they can live with each other and live in the world as the people they really are because they are two sides of the same coin.

Metzger inhabits Abby's vulnerable grumpiness like a second skin, while Abbey imbues Marilyn's optimism with a level of intensity that would try the patience of a saint. Hamilton excels as caught-in-the-middle Scotty and Webb definitely tugs on a few heartstrings as Benjamin. White and Bowman tread a fine line between enthusiastic participant and concerned family members. And Hesseltine orchestrates the games with a fine sense of the tragic potential lurking beneath the comic surface of this all-too-relatable story.

The cast is ably supported by Robert Pickering's scenic design, lighting design by Hesseltine and Justin Takata, Laura Rhinehart's costume design, Jon Turney's sound design, properties by Morgan Broom, Sebby Le's light and sound, and stage manager Jessica McKnight.

Evil Dead: The Musical

Long before he became a Hollywood A-list player for directing three mega-grossing Spider-Man movies, Sam Raimi was a man who achieved something even cooler: cult status. He did it by dropping out of college in 1981 and making a low-budget horror movie called The Evil Dead, which took off late in the 1980s, when VHS was king, with the release of its sequel Evil Dead 2. I watched both quite a bit behind the counter at the video store where I then worked. (Yeah, I was that guy.)

Through the pluck of a few dreamers, a musical adaptation was born, first staged in Toronto in 2003, then off-Broadway and now at the Gist Hall Theatre at Humboldt State University. The three films of the Evil Dead franchise — all of which provide material for this adaptation — are already laced with dark humor and high camp, both of which director Rae Robinson's production and cast bite into with gusto.

All a novice needs to know (other than there's a whole lot of simulated gore done with great smarts and creativity), is that the plot jumps off from the trope of five young college kids spending a weekend at a spooky cabin in some dark woods. Ash (William English III) is the leader of the group, and is accompanied by his girlfriend (Shawn Wagner), his sister (Elizabeth Whittemore) and another young couple, Scott (Victor Parra) and Shelly (Gwynnevere Cristobal). Scary noises outside the cabin and within lead to the discovery of weapons modern and otherwise, a 13th century book of the dead and a tape recorder with the scary voice of a researcher. From there things go haywire and hilarious alongside the gore.

Ahh, but with songs aplenty! There are, alas, some clunkers within the lineup but a couple of standouts involving the main players are "Look Who's Evil Now" and "What the Fuck Was That," as well as the full-cast musical number "Do The Necronomicon" in the second act. As Ash, English does a remarkable job channeling the character Bruce Campbell made famous — not just with the slicked-back hair and bloody flannel. As his sister Cheryl, Whittemore steals the show with her comic timing and all-out physical humor. But none of this would come across so well without the great work of a massive crew of scenic designers, costumers and makeup artists. After all, a hand severed in the first act does return to wreak some havoc in the second.

*The Humboldt State University Department of Theatre, Film and Dance's production of Evil Dead: The Musical plays at the Gist Hall Theatre on the HSU campus on Fridays and Saturdays at 7:30 p.m. through Nov. 3, with a Sunday matinee at 2 p.m. on Nov. 4. # Joan Gold's Dark Materials

Gratitude at Black Faun Gallery

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Approaching Joan Gold's installation of paintings at Black Faun Gallery is like walking into an animated conversation. The walls seem to dissolve into vibrating pattern. Fifty-eight tall, modular paintings on paper feature superimposed registers framing all-over fields of explosive, dancing pattern. Short, rounded, color-laden brushstrokes gyrate in formation like synchronized swimmers. Brushstrokes are layered, so what initially looks like a monochrome panel becomes an exercise in translucence and depth.

"They're meant to be an entire installation — meant to bounce off each other," the artist said. "I never think of them alone, although I usually sell them like that. I think of them as little families."

As families, the works strive toward balance. Each patterned surface presents the outcome of a sustained, unpremeditated creative act. "That's the first phase of the operation," Gold explained. "I paint on paper with no objective, except a feeling. Totally sensual and brainless. Pure pleasure. Then I get into the positioning and repositioning. This is the kind of thing I do for fun. I keep moving things around until they become paintings."

For some artists, abstraction becomes a language to communicate obsession; in Gold's paintings, balance and proportion rule. Much of the pleasure to be had in viewing these works — in addition to the purely retinal one caused by the dazzling play of so many patterns on the eye — is derived from the ingenious three-part compositions, which reconcile wildly different hues through adroit manipulations of value and proportion. Unexpectedly, some pairings are meltingly harmonious. Gossamer brushstrokes in lichen gray stand out against slate. Lemon yellow washes across brick red.

Gold grew up in Brooklyn and went to art school in New York in the 1950s, which she remembers as a heady time. The city was the world's art capital and the bold-face names of Abstract Expressionism still drank downtown. She has spent much of her life in the semi-tropics, near the ocean, painting — first in Caracas, Venezuela, where she traveled solo as a student on a U.S. State Department fellowship and ended up living for 24 years, and later in Eureka. Her sun-drenched color often seems to reflect affinity for light and heat.

Fields of color in Gold's paintings are sometimes overlaid with a whitewash to heighten their optical value, then juxtaposed with zones of a deeply saturated complementary hue. It's a classic West Coast colorist's move, calling to mind works like Richard Diebenkorn's Bay Area landscapes, David Hockney's poolside views of Los Angeles and Jennifer Bartlett's tesserae abstractions.

"My painting is about joy," Gold said. She recalls having a "tendency toward optimism" since early childhood, when seeing photos of Holocaust victims for the first time sparked a recuperative desire to make a place where destructive impulses could get no purchase. "It's hard to put it into words. But it's a question of balance — making life right." Indeed, to con-plate these paintings as a group is to be immersed in an experience of shimmering, reverberating visual complexity, unshaded by negative vibes.

A recently awarded grant from the Pollock-Krasner Foundation will make it possible for Gold to visit the Art Institute of Chicago, the Rothko Chapel in Houston and Ellsworth Kelly's recently unveiled "temple for light" in Austin, Texas, next year. In a statement for this exhibition, the artist wrote: "I am edging towards my 85th birthday and am well aware that this is the last chapter." At the same time, she says, she's on the cusp of a breakthrough.

When she went to art school in the '50s, Gold remembered, "we were all very interested in contemporary art ... we never learned about the Old Masters." Touring the Prado in Madrid a few years back triggered a need to revisit the Baroque. "When I applied for the grant I said, 'I want to study the Old Masters.' Specifically, I want to study the dark areas of their paintings. Because I'm moving toward darker color now." The new paintings Gold is working on involve pattern fields with darker base tonalities — charcoal grays, forest greens — while the matrices of brushmarks dancing on top of them are often vivid primaries like red or blue, used at or near full saturation.

"Rembrandt and Caravaggio knew stuff we'll never know about the technical aspects of painting," she said. "But it surprised me to see them make such use of what I would consider a gimmick. They'd have light bathing a figure and they'd set the figure against a dark, dark background — I can't call it black really, because I think they mixed brown and blue to get those colors. And then they would put a warm glaze on top that makes the colors beneath it glow. But the contrast was the gimmick. It created so much drama. I saw it and I said ... I want to use that gimmick! It works and it's beautiful." An impish smile crossed the artist's face as she contemplated painting into her eighth decade. "I'm not above that. I want beautiful and I want to please myself."

Gold thinks her work will evolve in the direction of greater simplicity. "One day, now some years past, I thought, what do I want to see when I walk into my own exhibition 10 or 20 years from now? And what I saw was monochrome. A blue panel, a green panel, a gray panel. Reduction. I haven't done that yet but I am moving in that direction. Or trying to. When I have a brush in my hands, I tend to complicate things." She laughed, then turned reflective.

Joan Gold's painting on paper
"Yellow, Gray, Red."

"The nice thing is: trying to be reductive but failing." Gold continued, "Not reaching the goal ... and yet through making that effort, the discipline or energy of the effort somehow enters the work. For me it's about painting as a part of life: a joyous quest that is continuously renewed," she mused. "I love paint. I love the process, I want the process. I want to keep working." ●

Joan Gold's exhibition "Gratitude" will be on view at Black Faun Gallery in Old Town Eureka between Nov. 3 and Nov. 24. An artist talk with Joan Gold will be held Nov. 10 at 4 p.m.

Gabrielle Gopinath is an art writer, critic and curator based in Arcata.

Setlist

Get to the Show and the Voting Booth

By Collin Yeo

music@northcoastjournal.com

This has been an ugly and busy week. White terrorism has been in the news and in our own community someone was stabbed to death in Arcata in what I am sure was a tragically pointless dispute. Two lives are now ruined: the victim's and the alleged attacker's. This isn't a crime to put on the shoulders of the local clubs. This isn't a crime to be borne by anyone. This is a crime, like the greater ones we face around us in the country at large, to be avoided. We can all lean in, keep an eye out, de-escalate and try to reduce harm. We can all try our best to do better and support each other in our brief and beautiful time under the sun. Have a week of solidarity and love.

Thursday

There's a big ol' electronic show happening over at the Arcata Theatre Lounge at 8:30 p.m. Random Rab is a West Coast electro-dance phenom known for tidally shifting the groove aesthetics of the room with deft sonic control and jazz fusion music cues. Jason Burruss and Anthony Jacobs join in ($15).

Darsombra is an inscrutable duo that plays music built for all-ages basement shows, condemned ballrooms, David Cronenberg-approved fish hatcheries and communist yoga studios. Do you have absolutely no idea what I am talking about? Good, then you have a clear head and are suitably prepared to check out their set at The Miniplex tonight. 9 p.m. ($7). Showing local flavor are the always impressive Ms. God and a solo-drone set by handsome man-about-town, Dan K., under the moniker Idyll. Get it.

Friday

Leo Kottke is a fingerpicking, open-tuning master craftsman of the acoustic guitar who, along with the late Michael Hedges and later player Kaki King, reinvented the possibilities inherent in the six-string medium for futureheads to hem and haw over. Come see for yourself at 8 p.m. at The Arkley Center for the Performing Arts at 8 p.m. ($49). Bring an aspiring guitarist and excite a young mind.

Over at the Arcata Playhouse at the same hour is the seventh annual celebration of the birthday of Joni Mitchell, with the first of two nights featuring — what else? — the music of Joni Mitchell, as performed by some of Humboldt's best ($15). Come see Jan Bramlett, Morgan Corviday, Beverly Twist, Marcia Mendels and many more interpret the true blue sounds of Song to a Seagull.

Saturday

RampArt Skatepark continues a solid gold run of fun shows today and tonight for the hoi polloi and aristoi together.

First up at noon is a free edition of Shred Fest, a sort of thank you for the locals who regularly people the park. FHOG, Ultramafic, NacOne and DJ Goldylocks all contribute a live soundtrack to a family-friendly ramp-shredding, bowl-spinning affair. Later on at 8 p.m. is a proper all-ages hardcore punk show when Portland bangers Long Knife open for veteran Tokyo punk rock masters Forward in what is certain to be an awesome night ($8). Local acts The ChainLinks and Racket start the fun.

Sunday

Somebody decided to make a musical out of one of the finest films of the outsider horror genre and the theater department at Humboldt State University is putting it on. Today is the last performance and also a 2 p.m. matinee so perhaps you should head over to Gist Hall and check out Evil Dead: The Musical while the getting is good ($15, $10 seniors and children).

Monday

Pilobolus is a nearly five-decade modern dance troupe whose offshoot Momix should be familiar to Center Arts ticket holders from yesteryear. Named after a sun-worshipping fungus that thrives on cowpats, Pilobolus survived the generational threshing of dance trends to find a niche in great big and circus-level production in our current decade. And bless these folks, they have earned it. If you feel like seeing something on the artier side of those arena-level dance troupes with French names and titles, pirouette on down to the Arkley Center for the Performing Arts at 7 p.m. and check this out ($56, $29 students).

Leo Kottke plays the Arkley Center for the Performing Arts at

Tuesday (Election Day)

Vote. Furthermore, encourage your extended family to vote. Spread the net farther outward and simply encourage voting in your social circles across the country. It's being taken away from us and that is not hyperbole. Marginalized people have been and are being denied the vote in record numbers. This is not a functioning democracy. Do what you can to make it one. Please. Organize, advocate, unite. We have the numbers. Use them.

Wednesday

The Goon Sax are a perfectly fun and dumb teenage garage band from Brisbane, Australia. The music is delightful and earnest. Blood Hunny and Wet Spot provide local support. The price is $6. The time is 7 p.m. The place is The Outer Space. Get in, it's bound to be good.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online.

Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

An army mobilized against desperate people is an abomination. A nation closed to the world is a lonely bunker full of cowards. Collin Yeo doesn't want to live in a bunker full of cowards.

The after(life) party continues with an all ages Día de los Muertos Dance Party. Get ready to shake the dust off and rattle your bones at the Arcata Veterans Hall on Fri., Nov. 2 from 7 p.m.-midnight. Music comes alive with tunes by Akilleyz and there'll be plenty of food available for purchase. All proceeds benefit the Latinx Center for Excellence ($10, $8 advance).

Both Sides, Now.

All I Want is to celebrate the music and life of the legendary Joni Mitchell at the seventh annual Joni Mitchell Tribute Show. Performed at the Arcata Playhouse by a group of talented and passionate Humboldt singers and musicians, this two-part concert covers a diverse selection of the Grammy Award-winning artist's work. Jan Bramlett, Morgan Corviday, Marla Joy, Marcia Mendels, Mike LaBolle, Chris Manspeaker, Violet Dinning, Julie Froblom, Tina Garsen, Leslie Quinn, Beverly Twist and Joel Sonenshein all lend their talents to the tribute.

The music plays Fri., Nov. 2 and Sat., Nov. 3 from 8-10 p.m. There's no need to take a Big Yellow Taxi, the venue is a nearby favorite, the Arcata Playhouse. If you've got an Urge for Going, tickets are at Wildberries in Arcata, The Works in Eureka or online at www.brownpapertickets.com. It's a good idea to get them soon — this show sells out every year. Attendees are also encouraged to bring canned or non-perishable food for those in need, which will be donated to Food for People. ($15). Joni, we've all got A Case of You.

Reviews

AN EVENING WITH BEVERLY LUFF LINN.

Some screenwriters write a script for a specific actor. Wes Anderson famously wrote Royal Tenenbaum for Gene Hackman and had to cajole the actor to take the part. An Evening with Beverly Luff Linn, which recently had a two-screening weekend at the Minor Theatre and is available on demand now, feels as though it was written for a specific location: Humboldt County, California.

In homage, with plenty of jabs, the local landscape is more than just a backdrop for this cinematic hodgepodge of familiar late 20th century weirdness. The universe director Jim Hoskins creates could only exist in Eureka and its surrounding areas. To my mind, An Evening with Beverly Luff Linn is a perfect celluloid adaptation of our community, rivaled only by Endor via Redwood National and State parks.

It's an odd movie and won't be for everyone. It's a heist film, a mystery, a story of love lost and found again, all swirling around Lulu Danger (Aubrey Plaza, playing refreshingly against type). Its exaggerated strangeness and non sequiturs will no doubt turn off a certain set (I'm subtweeting this publication's actual film columnist) but its purposeful and persistent aesthetic delighted me.

Lulu works in a crummy coffee shop with a couple of friendly weirdos and her husband, Shane Danger (Emile Hirsch), an overbearing, unrepentant dick. When corporate tells Shane to save money by firing an employee, he axes Lulu. Shane, driven by jealousy of Lulu's brother's cash savings, leads a bungled robbery of the brother's mini mart. When a mysterious drifter overhears Lulu's brother Abjay plotting revenge, he offers to retrieve the cash box.

The gunman, Colin Keith Threadener (Jemaine Clement), confronts Shane in his home and Lulu sees an opportunity, taking Colin's gun and the cash box, and ordering Colin to drive her away. This begins their odyssey. When Lulu sees an advertisement for a magical evening with Beverly Luff Linn (Craig Robinson), whom she clearly recognizes, she and Colin take residency at the Hotel where he'll perform. The intrigue continues as Lulu tries to contact Beverly Luff Linn but is thwarted by his assistant, fends off Colin's growing feelings for her, hides from her husband and deals with her post-marriage crisis.

Much of the movie takes place in the confines of the Eureka Inn, which is absolutely fitting for its oddball mashup of Tudor framing, wood paneled rooms, carpeted lobby and eerie bar. Hoskins clearly revels in discomfort, and it's strangely delightful. The talented cast is supported by character actors, people clearly selected for their decidedly non-movie star affectations and appearances. The charismatic Robinson as the titular character delivers nearly all his lines as expressive grunts, recalling Peter Boyle's monster in Young Frankenstein, and the denouement of his character's story is surprisingly touching.

Plaza tones down her trademark snark and pitch-black nihilism, turning Lulu into a sympathetic refugee from a crappy life born of a lack of options in her "shithole town in the middle of nowhere." That observation, along with Colin's frustration at their "shitbox, dickhole hotel," seem like knowing digs at our community, even if they're all in good fun.

And this movie is fun. It is frequently laugh out loud hilarious. Clement, Plaza, Robinson and Matt Berry, as Luff Lin's assistant Rodney Von Donkensteiger, are masters of comic timing and expression. Hirsch clearly enjoys playing an egotistical, ambitious and deeply stupid villain. The supporting cast is delightfully weird and earnest. Local funny guy Luis "Nando" Molina gets a wordless cameo that's one of the best scenes in the movie.

An Evening with Beverly Luff Linn is also a masterclass on visual design. You're not meant to love the haphazard aesthetic, which mixes motifs from the '70s, '80s and '90s like an outfit of naugahyde, plaid, stripes and tie-dye. But the outrageousness of the costumes, the hair and makeup, and the set design binds together to create a cohesive alternate universe. Every detail, down to the names of sodas, is a clever observation.

The crew Hoskins assembled for this is impressive. Production designer Jason Kisvarday also created the worlds of Swiss Army Man (another entertaining piece of quirk-cinema filmed locally), Boots Riley's Sorry to Bother You and Childish Gambino's This is America. Costume designer Christina Blackaller worked on Beatriz Comes to Dinner and The Lovely Bones. Nearly every crew member appeared to have worked on Hoskin's previous feature, The Greasy Strangler, which I shamefully have yet to see. Bumping it up my queue now.

At the Oct. 11 cast and crew screening at the Minor Theatre, a small crowd formed in front of a red carpet set up by the Humboldt County Film Commission. At the front of the line, an older man with long gray beard sported a bold blazer covered in neon green pot leaves. A worn limousine circled the block before offloading its lone passenger, a woman whom several of the attendees recognized. None of the movie's prominent stars were in sight but whoops sounded through the theater when locals appeared on the screen.

As the surreality of the screening dispersed onto the streets of Arcata, it occurred to me we are all extras in a cosmos not so different from Beverly Luff Linn's. AMAZON, ITUNES, GOOGLE PLAY, VUDU.

POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property.
You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorders office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed or trust on the property.
NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER:
The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 844-477-7869, or visit this internet Web site www.stoxposting.com, using the file number assigned to this case T.S.# 83124. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. CALI-

Free Will Astrology

Week of Nov. 1, 2018

By Rob Brezsny

freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have officially arrived at the heart of the most therapeutic phase of your cycle. Congratulations! It's an excellent time to fix what's wrong, hurt or distorted. You will attract more help than you can imagine if you summon an aggressive approach toward finding antidotes and cures. A good way to set the tone for your aggressive determination to feel better is to heed this advice from poet Maya Angelou: "Take a day to heal from the lies you've told yourself and the ones that have been told to you."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): U2's singer Bono, born under the sign of Taurus, says that all of us suffer from the sense that something's missing from our lives. We imagine that we lack an essential quality or experience and its absence makes us feel sad and insufficient. French philosopher Blaise Pascal referred to this emptiness as "a God-shaped hole." Bono adds that "you can never completely fill that hole" but you may find partial fixes through love and sex, creative expression, family, meaningful work, parenting, activism and spiritual devotion. I bring this to your attention, Taurus, because I have a strong suspicion that in the coming weeks you will have more power to fill your God-shaped hole than you've had in a long time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): "Most of our desires are clichés, right? Ready to wear, one size fits all. I doubt if it's even possible to have an original desire anymore." So says a character in Gemini author Tobias Wolff's short story "Sanity." Your assignment in the coming weeks, Gemini, is to refute and rebel against this notion. The cosmic rhythms will work in your favor to the degree that you cultivate innovative yearnings and unique urges. I hope you'll make it your goal to have the experiences necessary to stir up an outbreak of original desires.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): If you're a typical member of the Cancerian tribe, you're skilled at responding constructively when things go wrong. Your intelligence rises up hot and strong when you get sick or rejected or burned. But if you're a classic Crab, you have less savvy in dealing with triumphs. You may sputter when faced with splashy joy, smart praise or lucky breaks. But everything I just said is meant to be a challenge, not a curse. One of the best reasons to study astrology is to be aware of the potential shortcomings of your sign so you can outwit and overcome them. That's why I think that eventually you'll evolve to the point where you won't be a bit flustered when blessings arrive. And the immediate future will bring you excellent opportunities to upgrade your response to good fortune.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): "Each of us needs something of an island in her life," said poet John Keats. "If not an actual island, at least some place, or space in time, in which to be herself, free to cultivate her differences from others." According to my reading of the astrological omens, Leo, you'll be wise to spend extra time on your own island in the next two weeks. Solitude is unlikely to breed unpleasant loneliness but will instead inspire creative power and evoke inner strength. If you don't have an island yet, go in search! (P.S.: I translated Keats' pronouns into the feminine gender.)

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): I'm rooting for you to engage in experimental intimacy, Virgo. I hope you'll have an affinity for sweet blends and incandescent mixtures and arousing juxtapositions. To get in the right mood for this playful work, you could read love poetry and listen to uplifting songs that potentize your urge to merge. Here are a few lyrical passages to get you warmed up. 1. "Your flesh quivers against mine like moonlight on the sea." —Julio Cortázar 2. "When she smiles like that she is as beautiful as all my secrets." —Anne Carson 3. "My soul is alight with your infinitude of stars... The flowers of your garden blossom in my body." —Rabindranath Tagore 4.

"I can only find you by looking deeper, that's how love leads us into the world." —Anne Michaels

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Of course I want you to have more money. I'd love for you to buy experiences that expand your mind, deepen your emotional intelligence and foster your ability to create inspiring forms of togetherness. My soul would celebrate if you got access to new wealth that enabled you to go in quest of spiritual fun and educational adventures. On the other hand, I wouldn't be thrilled about you spending extra cash on trivial desires or fancy junk you don't really need. Here's why I feel this way: to the extent that you seek more money to pursue your most righteous cravings, you're likely to get more money.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "Penetralia" is a word that means the innermost or most private parts, the most secret and mysterious places. It's derived from the same Latin term that evolved into the word "penetrate." You Scorpios are of course the zodiac's masters of penetralia. More than any other sign, you're likely to know where the penetralia are, as well as how to get to them and what to do when you get to them. I suspect that this tricky skill will come in extra handy during the coming weeks. I bet your intimate adeptness with penetralia will bring you power, fun and knowledge.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Sagittarian poet Rainer Maria Rilke suggested that we cultivate an alertness for the ever-present possibility of germination and gestation. On a regular basis, he advised, we should send probes down into the darkness, into our unconscious minds, to explore for early signs of awakening. And when we discover the forces of renewal stirring there in the depths, we should be humble and reverent toward them, understanding that they are as-yet beyond the reach of our ability to understand. We shouldn't seek to explain and define them at first, but simply devote ourselves to nurturing them. Everything I just said is your top assignment in the coming weeks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You're in a phase of your cycle when your influence is at a peak. People are more receptive than usual to your ideas and more likely to want the same things you do. Given these conditions, I think the best information I can offer you is the following meditation by Capricorn activist Martin Luther King Jr. "Power without love is reckless and abusive, and love without power is sentimental and anemic. Power at its best is love implementing the demands of justice and justice at its best is power correcting everything that stands against love."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Aquarian environmentalist Edward Abbey spent much of his life rambling around in the great outdoors. He was an emancipated spirit who regarded the natural world as the only church he needed. In an eruption of ecstatic appreciation, he once testified that "Life is a joyous dance through daffodils beneath cerulean blue skies and then, then what? I forget what happens next." And yet the truth is, Abbey was more than a wild-hearted Dionysian explorer in the wilderness. He found the discipline and diligence to write 23 books! I mention this, Aquarius, because now is a perfect time for you to be like the disciplined and diligent and productive version of Abbey.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): For renowned Piscean visual artist Anne Truitt (1921-2004), creating her work was high adventure. She testified that artists like her had "to catapult themselves wholly, without holding back one bit, into a course of action without having any idea where they will end up. They are like riders who gallop into the night, eagerly leaning on their horse's neck, peering into a blinding rain." Whether or not you're an artist, Pisces, I suspect your life in the coming weeks may feel like the process she described. And that's a good thing! A fun thing! Enjoy your ride. ●

TMT: Astronomy's New Eye

By Barry Evans
fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Say it quickly — “30-meter telescope” — and it doesn't sound like much. But this new $2 billion instrument under construction near the summit of Mauna Kea on Hawai'i's Big Island is a monster. Compare, for instance, the current record holder for optical telescopes, the 10.4-meter Gran Telescopio Canarias (located on Spain's Canary Islands) which has a light-collecting area one-eighth that of the TMT. A huge “light bucket” like this may well revolutionize astronomy by allowing us to see the first stars and galaxies, birthed soon after the Big Bang. And much more. “Expect the unexpected” might well be the motto of astronomers wanting to take full advantage of the new 'scope once it's up and running.

Seven sites were considered for the TMT, with the dormant volcano Mauna Kea coming out well ahead of the others. It's simply the best location on Earth for an optical telescope, combining as it does high altitude (13,290 feet, above most of the moisture in the atmosphere), pollution-free skies and ease of access for construction and operation. It's also in the northern hemisphere, so will be able to view those parts of the heavens inaccessible to an even larger telescope, the E-ELT, now being built in Chile by a European consortium.

All optical telescopes are plagued by atmospheric distortion, even at 13,000 feet. The solution, adaptive optics (aka “the poor man's Hubble telescope”), measures atmospheric distortion in real time by creating and monitoring a pseudo-star with a powerful laser that excites sodium atoms in the upper atmosphere. The distortion is then canceled out by continuously adjusting the shape of a telescope's mirror. The TMT's mirror actually consists of 492 thin (45 millimeter) hexagonal segments and each one will be actively controlled from the back hundreds of times a second by 21 actuators. The result will have the several hundred segments functioning as a single, continuously flexing mirror.

I held off writing this column until the state of Hawai'i had decided whether to allow construction to proceed. For several years, protestors have argued that the sacred nature of Mauna Kea should preclude siting a 14th telescope on or near its summit. A long and bitter court-driven process culminated on Sept. 28 with a 5-to-2 vote by the Hawai'i Board of Land and Natural Resources permitting construction to go ahead, with financial guarantees and many conditions, including that three older instruments on Mauna Kea will be decommissioned.

Not being a native Hawai'ian (and coming from the land of Captain Cook, whose 1778 landing on Kaua'i began a long and distasteful history of exploitation by outsiders), I'm not in a position to judge the decision. I can't help thinking, though, that the original settlers in Hawai'i, who nearly a thousand years ago used stars to navigate vast, featureless distances across the ocean from Tahiti and Samoa, might have appreciated the islands' unique role now in exploring the universe from arguably the best viewing platform on the planet.

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) notes that the TMT's mirror has 86,436 times the area of his backyard telescope.
